

* * * * *

CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS ISSUE

PETER COOKE: Professional musician and musical director with extensive musical training; recently spent four years in Uganda, partly as Director of Music, Makerere University, Kampala; at present senior ethnomusicologist, School of Scottish Studies, University of Edinburgh.

MARJORIE DAVIDSON: Lecturer in Music for the Department of Education, Chipata, Zambia.

KEN GOURLAY: Ethnomusicologist attached to the Joint Board of Graduate Studies, Makerere University, Uganda.

THOMAS JOHNSTON: Graduate of Trinity College of Music, London; professional musician; studied sociology at California State College; at present completing a Ph.D. thesis on the music of the Shangana-Tsonga for the University of the Witwatersrand under the supervision of Dr. John Blacking.

A. M. JONES: Now retired from the chair of African music at S.O.A.S., London University; research member of the A.M.S.; well-known for his proposition of African polyrhythm in many works.

ATTA ANNAN MENSAH: Ghanaian ethnomusicologist, at present working on the music of Zambia for the Centre for African Studies, University of Zambia, Lusaka.

G. T. NURSE: Medical Practitioner and linguist for many years in Malawi.

HEWITT PANTALEONI: Ethnomusicologist teaching at New York State University, Oneonta, and at Wesleyan University; has led several group university field trips to Ghana; stresses the importance of participation; has arranged for several African master musicians, including S. KOBLA LADZEKO, to instruct in the United States.

ANDREW TRACEY: Musician; Musicologist of I.L.A.M.; assistant editor of "African Music."