
CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS ISSUE

Dr Susanne Fürniss is an ethnomusicologist at the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique (France). She has conducted extensive research on Pygmy music (Aka and Baka) and is particularly interested in musical systematics and in the articulation between musical categories and the socio-religious system of a given society.

Dr Frank Gunderson, Assistant Professor of Ethnomusicology, Florida State University, received a B.A. from the Evergreen State College (WA), and an M.A. and Ph.D. in Ethnomusicology from Wesleyan University (CT). His most recent publication, Sukuma Musical Labor Song Texts as Primary Sources for Tanzanian History, is forthcoming (2009) with Brill Academic Publishers.

Dr Marie Jorritsma recently completed her Ph.D. studies in ethnomusicology at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia. Her research interests include South African music (particularly church music in the Karoo) and music and gender. She lectures at the University of South Africa (UNISA) and serves as the secretary of the South African Society for Research in Music (SASRIM) and the reviews editor of the Muziki journal.

Dr Heather Maxwell is an ethnomusicologist, teacher, and musical artist. She specializes in African music and jazz and is currently Visiting Faculty at the University of Virginia. She has worked with Carnegie Hall, the Smithsonian Institution, the Virginia Foundation for the Humanities, Harvard University, Indiana University, and the Music Resource Center of Charlottesville.

Gavin Steingo is a Ph.D. candidate in Anthropology of Music at the University of Pennsylvania. He has published articles in numerous journals, including Black Music Research Journal, Popular Music and Society, African Identities, and the Review of Disability Studies. Gavin is currently guest editing a special issue of the World of Music on the topic of kwaito.