The principal exciting cause appears to be continued inebriety: nearly one third of the cases admitted, may be traced to this fertile source of disease.

From the very limited number of recent cases sent in, it is extremely difficult to form any thing like a correct criterion of the violence of the paroxysms of the disease as it exists in different nations, or to judge whether they are alike sensible to the exciting causes; so far, however, as there has been an opportunity to form an opinion, it would appear that the disease on its first attack, is as violent in the coloured as in the European subjects, although the latter appear to be more influenced by mental causes.

The cures amount to about one-sixth of the number: this proportion is of course comparatively small, when compared with the proportion of cures in many establishments. The Hospital is, however, very ill adapted either for the cure or reception of Lunatics, but the very serious expense that would attend any attempt at building a proper Lunatic Asylum, precludes any hopes at present of remedying the inconveniences of the existing establishment.
